Hamoodley Oil and Mining Company Issues Gold Discovery Review Update

Witbank, Mpumalanga | 15 May 2026

Hamoodley Oil and Mining Company, a privately held South African mining and energy company, has issued a private-company update regarding a gold discovery review connected to its mineral-resource development focus.

The update relates to early-stage geological interest identified through internal project review and stakeholder engagement. The company will continue with technical, environmental, legal, and regulatory due diligence before making any commercial commitment or operational announcement.

The company confirms that this media statement is not an investment solicitation, not a share offer, and not a public-market announcement. Hamoodley Oil and Mining Company remains privately held, and all project opportunities remain subject to board approval, formal documentation, and applicable regulatory processes.

KEY POINTS

The gold discovery review is being handled as a private-company project-development matter.

No reserve estimate, monetary valuation, production forecast, or investment return is stated in this release.

Further work will focus on technical verification, environmental responsibility, lawful land and stakeholder engagement, and compliance-led project planning.

A company spokesperson said:

"Hamoodley Oil and Mining Company is approaching this gold discovery review carefully and responsibly. Our priority is to complete proper due diligence, engage the relevant stakeholders, and make sure that any future step is supported by compliance, safety, and environmental review."

The company added that future updates will be issued only when appropriate documentation and internal review milestones have been completed.
